First position, second position, step-ball-change...Young children in dance classes learn not only the basics of ballet and tap. They also explore elements of music like beat and rhythm; practice coordination and poise; and gain an introduction to the routine and discipline of a dance program. Dance classes as part of the Play & Learn Center at Holding Hands are designed especially for young children. This fall, three class levels will be offered — a beginner class for younger children, an intermediate class for older children with no dance experience and an intermediate II class for children with some dance experience. All classes meet for once a week for 45 minutes over an eighteen week semester. In each class, children learn and practice both ballet and tap steps and routines. The program culminates each year in a spring recital.
